

BEDTIMETHE SEX
EDUCATION
SHOW
TUESDAY 9TH,
8PM,
CHANNEL 4

Brits don't have a great reputation when it comes to bedroom antics, and teen pregnancy rates are the highest in Europe. So Anna Richardson, host of Channel 4's The Sex Education Show, set out to discover what we really know, think and like about sex. Here, she tells us about some of her stickier moments...!

wax, and the cameras would wait outside. Actually, I was having it all off, and the cameras were there the whole time. I actually laughed my head off doing that - it was really funny."

HOW DID PEOPLE REACT TO HAVING A STRANGER AND A CAMERA CREW POUNCE ON THEM TO ASK THEM ABOUT THEIR SEX LIVES?

"We're such odd people, the British. On the one hand, we don't really know a great deal about sex, and aren't willing to talk about it with our children, and sometimes with our peers. But at the same time, if a stranger stops you in the street and asks you, 'How often do you have sex?' people are really happy to talk about it. It's really peculiar."

YOU GET A BIKINI WAX ON THE FIRST SHOW, WAS THAT THE WORST THING YOU HAD TO DO FOR THE SERIES?

"I thought I was being sent to have a little bit of a bikini-line

THIS PICTURE OF YOU AND THE SNAKE IS QUITE INTERESTING...!

"Ah, yes. I was told we were going for the Eve in the Garden of Eden look, holding an apple and a snake, naked apart from a couple of fig leaves. I rocked up to studio, and thought I'd be OK with the python when he came out of the box, but he was six foot long. I was naked and feeling a bit vulnerable anyway, and apparently pythons are burrowers. I was having to be stock still for the camera, and he was at my face, and his tongue was going in my mouth. I freaked out!"

Let's talk about sex

ANNA RICHARDSON TACKLES THE SENSITIVE ISSUE OF WHAT US BRITS ARE LIKE IN BED!